The Cincinnati Woman's Club recently awarded scholarships to 28 young women, continuing a time-honored tradition that reaches back 98 years.

Scholars pursuing degrees from Mount St. Joseph University, Northern Kentucky University, and the University of Cincinnati, in varied studies and academic levels, received scholarships through the generosity of Club members. They were recognized for their excellence at the "You are the Future" scholarship dinner on October 20 at the Club.

Scholarships last three years, beginning in the student's sophomore year, and the Club also awards scholarships to graduate students. In addition to financial support, scholars from the University of Cincinnati, Mount St. Joseph University, and Northern Kentucky University receive mentoring from Club members during their academic careers and beyond. Mentors, often with similar career paths, serve as counselors in academics, career planning, and networking. Many scholars and mentors establish long-lasting supportive relationships through this program.

This year the Club also honored four women from the Art Academy of Cincinnati with scholarships from the Longacre and Beck funds. These funds are special accounts established to recognize young artists. The honorees are Caitlyn Confer, Kiersten Creighton, Autumn Fletcher, and Mambi Morris.
